Teaching and learning strategies.

- Model ideal behavior: Clearly explain proper behavior, and then follow it yourself.
- Encourage initiative: Allow students to actively participate in the learning process with class discussions and exercises that support the initiative.
- Avoid collective punishment: While it can be difficult, make a point of calling out disruptive behaviors on an individual, not collective, basis.
- Use non-verbal communication: Complement words with actions and visual aids to improve content delivery, helping students focus and process lessons.
- Stronger student relationship: Some teaching strategies include pitting students in groups, which allows students to interact with and learn from one another.
- Increased likelihood of retention: Teaching strategies that actively involve students in their own learning and even put them in situations where they can teach others can greatly improve students' ability to retain important nursing concepts.
- Promotion of self-guided learning: Some strategies promote independent learning, which can improve students' critical thinking and decision-making abilities.
- Appeal to different learning styles: Some students are visual learners who prefer to observe and get information from watching, while others prefer to learn by doing. Trying different teaching strategies can help you adapt your teaching to different learning styles in your classroom.
