Highlights of the Exhibition-

The Department of Gynaecology and Obstetrics, Bharati Vidyapeeth College of Homoeopathy, organized the ANKUR Exhibition as a women's health awareness initiative with active participation from the Third-Year students. who enthusiastically prepared and presented various educational models, charts, and interactive activities focusing on women's health. The students prepared several live and working models on important topics, including the menstrual cycle, foetal circulation, abnormal vaginal discharge, breast examination, artificial intelligence (AI)-based learning models using concepts from D.C. Dutta's Gynaecology, immunization schedule, carcinoma of the breast, family planning, hysterectomy, and menstrual hygiene. Informative charts were also displayed to reinforce key health messages. A special feature of the exhibition was the students' effort to communicate health information in both Marathi and English, making the sessions more accessible to the visiting ASHA workers. The students explained the models and discussed important topics such as postnatal care, PCOD, fibroid conditions, and other common Gynaecological health concerns. Special emphasis was given to breast cancer awareness, including the importance of early detection and demonstration of the correct method of breast self-examination.

The programme was graced by Dr. Swati Mohite, HOD, Department of Gynaecology & Obstetrics, Bharati Vidyapeeth College of Ayurveda, as the chief guest. The programme commenced with ribbon cutting, followed by lamp lighting. This was followed by the introduction of the chief guest and a warm welcome to the ASHA workers. The felicitation of the chief guest was carried out by I/C Principal Dr. Anita Patil. The programme further included an address by Principal Madam, followed by an inspiring speech by Dr. Swati Mohite Madam. After the inaugural session, the chief guest, faculty members, guests, and ASHA workers visited the exhibition. The ASHA workers actively interacted with the students, asked questions, and participated enthusiastically in discussions related to the displayed models and women's health topics.

After the exhibition walkthrough, various games and interactive activities were organized for the ASHA workers. A self-learning/knowledge point was also conducted to reinforce the health-related information shared during the exhibition. As a token of love and appreciation, the Third-Year students distributed plant seeds to the ASHA workers, conveying a message of growth, health, and sustainability.
Refreshments were arranged by the college for all the participants. A total of 60 ASHA workers visited the exhibition and actively participated in the various activities. They appreciated the students' efforts and provided positive feedback regarding the exhibition and its informative, interactive, and community-oriented approach.

The ANKUR Exhibition proved to be a valuable initiative for creating awareness about women's health and promoting preventive healthcare practices at the community level. The active participation of the Third-Year students and the enthusiastic involvement of the ASHA workers made the programme meaningful and successful. The exhibition also provided students with an excellent opportunity to apply their academic knowledge, develop communication skills, and contribute towards community health awareness.

Beneficiaries: The programme benefited 60 ASHA workers and students from First Year, Second Year, and Fourth Year of B.V.D.U. Homoeopathic Medical College, Pune, who actively participated in the programme.
